[5] The Places That Scare You: Mechanics Liens, Stop Notices and Litigation

A project fully shut down or delayed because of payment disputes. Unfortunately, many payment disputes simply arise from a misunderstanding of the contract documents, and whether valid or not, a mechanics lien or stop payment notice is a very powerful tool that can cause a lot of problems with the project. This course will review some of the common misunderstandings that arise concerning contract documents, how these can trigger mechanics liens and stop payment notices, and best practices for resolving these problems even before they start. The course will also cover the nuts and bolts of mechanics liens and stop payment notices, and what to expect in the litigation process.

[6] When Adversaries Are Friends (Qualifies for 1.25 hours Legal Ethics Credit)

The world grows increasingly adversarial, but what happens in real estate litigation when adversaries are friends? Attorneys David Fu, Rinat Erlich, and Jose Mendoza frequently oppose each other in the real estate broker litigation space, and will address the benefits and challenges when frequently in opposition, with the underlying conclusion that cases settle faster and with less expense when opponents cooperate.

David Fu, Esq., David Fu and Associates Speakers:

Rinat Erlich, Esa., Manning & Kass, Ellrod, Ramirez, Trester LLP

Jose Mendoza, Esa., Carlson Law Group

[7] Roads, Streets and Highways as Boundary: Fee or Easement, Reversionary Rights and Allocation of Vacated Public Street Rights of Way

Review of statutory and case law rules of reversionary rights and allocation of portions of vacated public street rights of way to abutting properties on the basis of interpretation of descriptions and plat maps used for real property conveyance.

Vit Liskutin, Esq., PLS, Liskutin Law Firm

[8] Barriers to Housing Production: Real and Perceived

Disagreement remains over the causes of California's housing shortage. Recent legislation, such as SB 35, the housing accountability act, and other streamlining legislation attempts represent efforts to address the problem. CEQA and the CEQA Guidelines (including the new Guidelines) also provide tools for regulatory streamlining. However, cities continue to struggle to approve new housing developments and developers blame CEQA and regulatory delays for the limited housing production. This panel will explore the on-going challenges to the construction of new housing and whether those challenges are real or perceived, including reviewing data on processing times and regulatory hurdles to approving new development. Panelists will discuss options for addressing the challenges in order to speed the process for approvals of new housing.

Moderator: Karen Tiedemann, Esq., Goldfard & Lipman Eric Biber, Esq., U. C. Berkeley School of Law Speakers:

Terry Watt, Infill Builders

Christopher Calfee, California Natural Resources Agency

[9] Short Term Rentals: Surveying the Legal Landscape of AirBNB, VRBO, and Other Online Rental Housing Platforms

Given the ever-growing affordable housing crisis, many homeowners and tenants are now turning to short-term rental platforms to supplement their incomes and to help offset housing costs. As a result, numerous cities have enacted laws to regulate short-term rentals. This course will provide examples of different municipal regulations regarding short-term rentals; discuss potential penalties and damages for non-complying hosts; explain the appropriate remedies available to hosts in the event the short-term guest gains tenancy rights; and offer practical guidance regarding home-share compliance and stopping tenant home-sharing activities.

[13] Workspace for Hire: Office Co-Working and Workspace as Service Leasing Issues

The demand for co-working and flexible office space has increased dramatically and is expected to continue to grow. As a result, the volume of co-working and flexible office space lease transactions has increased exponentially. We will explore commercial leasing issues specific to negotiating these types of leases. While co-working and flexible office lease transactions have a lot in common with standard office leasing transactions, there are several specialized issues to address when negotiating these types of leases, including permitted use, licensing rights, tenant/guarantor structuring, maintenance and repairs, insurance, rights of first refusals, exclusivity rights, and more. We will explore these topics from the landlord and tenant perspective, as well as issues a company may want to consider when entering into a co-working or other flexible office arrangement.

Litigation Under the Housing Accountability Act: Zen and the Art of Objective Standards [34]

In 2017 and 2018, the Legislature added teeth to the Housing Accountability Act (HAA), a previously little-known statute that, thanks to recent amendments, has now roared into life. In strengthening the HAA, the Legislature's stated intent is to curb the ability of local governments to deny housing, whether affordable or market rate. The HAA has become a litigation favorite of developers and "Yes in My Backyard" (YIMBY) groups seeking to challenge cites' and counties' denial of or reduction in density of housing development projects throughout the state. In a nutshell, the HAA makes it difficult for cities and counties to deny or reduce the density of projects that comply with "objective" local standards. This panel will provide an overview of the HAA, and discuss the challenges and strategies involved in litigating under the Act. The panel will focus on the many open questions under the HAA, including the relationship between the HAA and CEQA, and the fundamental question of what constitutes an "objective" local standard.
