Fresno's Story: Rebuilding the Center of Central California

Welcome by Gideon Kracov, 2014-2015 Chair, Environmental Law Section, Law Office of Gideon Kracov, Los Angeles. Introductions by Letitia D. Moore, Assistant Regional Counsel, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, San Francisco. Keynote presentation by Ashley Swearengen, Mayor of Fresno.

Ashley Swearengen

Ashley Swearengen was elected Mayor of Fresno in 2008. In addition to her efforts to revitalize downtown Fresno and its surrounding neighborhoods, Mayor Swearengen has also launched a number of major initiatives, including the "Building Neighborhood Capacity Program"—a federally supported pilot program intended to catalyze community-driven change in neighborhoods that have historically faced barriers to revitalization. Mayor Swearengen was named one of California's top 10 mayors by Capitol Weekly, and was identified by the Brookings Institution as a member of the "Pragmatic Caucus." She is a board member of the California League of Cities, chair of the California Partnership for the San Joaquin Valley, and at the national level, serves on the leadership team of the U.S. Conference of Mayors as a member of its Executive Committee. Mayor Swearengen holds a Bachelor of Science (magna cum laude) and a Master of Business Administration (summa cum laude) from California State University, Fresno.

Session 3: Going Underground: Local Governance and Planning Under the Sustainable Groundwater Management Act

California finally has a plan to sustainably manage its shrinking groundwater resources. But the Sustainable Groundwater Management Act's founding principle - that groundwater management is best accomplished locally - now faces a major test. Local agencies must act quickly to form new governing bodies, Groundwater Sustainability Agencies, to develop and implement plans for sustainable basin management. Daunting obstacles remain, from gaps in information and institutional accountability to severe funding limitations and the disconnect between surface water and groundwater management. Can progress arrive in time to prevent destructive races to the bottom of groundwater basins? This multidisciplinary panel considers the prospects for counties, cities, and local agencies to equitably engage stakeholders and communities in effective groundwater governance.

Friday, October 23 | 9:15-10:45 am | 1.5 Hours MCLE

Session 4: From Here to Eternity: The Trend Toward Extended Producer Responsibility

Extended Producer Responsibility ("EPR") is an environmental protection strategy intended to minimize the total environmental impact of a product, including product packaging, by making the manufacturer of the product responsible for its entire life-cycle, including for its take-back, recycling and final disposal. A similar concept, Product Stewardship ("PS") involves making all parties that manufacture, sell, distribute, use or dispose of a product responsible for its proper management. Since 2006, there has been a growing trend towards regulating EPR and PS ranging from international to local regulations. Areas of focus of EPR and PS policies include motor vehicle switches, batteries, cell phones, fluorescent lamps, mattresses, paint, medical sharps (needles), mercury containing thermostats and pharmaceuticals. Recent regulations and cases will be discussed, as will overall trends and the likely future of EPR and PS policies in California and beyond.

Session 5: The Long and Winding Road: The Future of Transportation Spending and Emission Reductions

California faces a severe backlog of transportation infrastructure needs but a shortage of revenue to address them. At the same time, the state seeks to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from the transportation sector, primarily through reducing vehicle miles traveled. This panel will discuss how environmental concerns may shape the future of transportation spending decisions in California and how new sources of funding could affect that effort.

Session 6: The Lifetime Achievement Award Annual Panel: A Look at Joseph Sax

The Yin and the Yang: The Role of the Public Trust Doctrine and Takings Law as Conceptual Bookends in the Management of California's Natural Resources

In 2014, The State Bar of California Environmental Law Section posthumously gave the inaugural Lifetime Achievement Award to Professor Joseph Sax. Professor Sax's scholarship covered a wide terrain within the field of environmental law, but he is perhaps best known for his groundbreaking work in defining and refining the understanding and delineation of the public trust doctrine and takings law. Decades after Professor Sax began his exploration into these legal doctrines, they continue to shape public policy and government decision-making in important ways. This panel will discuss the overall impact of the public trust doctrine and takings law, recent decisions, and the path ahead.

Session 7: Water Transfers: Love Child of the Free Market or Deal with the Devil?

California's massive water infrastructure already redistributes water throughout the state. In this fourth year of drought, competition for what little water is available is more intense than ever and the water transfer market is hot. This panel will explore the applicable legal structures, impediments to transfers, the environmental and economic effects of water transfers, and potential new directions for water markets. Real examples will be used as a means to illuminate the ability of water transfers to help reallocate water to where it is needed most. The panel will also grapple with what makes sound public policy with respect to transfers, especially given the long term emphasis on regional self-reliance.

Session 8: Administrative Advocacy: Effective Participation in Administrative Proceedings

An environmental lawyer's success in protecting his or her client's interests often depends on working with administrative agencies. An understanding of the workings of the specific agency involved and the type of administrative proceeding to be followed is essential. This practical skills session will cover effective advocacy before the California Air Resources Board, and the State Water Resources Control Board (and its nine regional water quality control boards), in both legislative and adjudicative proceedings. Areas to be covered include practice under the California Administrative Procedures Act, permitting and other adjudicative proceedings, ex parte contacts, and separation of functions.

Session 9: Global Action on Global Warming: Trade, Diplomacy and Climate Populism

Yes, there is such a thing as international climate law, and it can have a direct effect on you, your clients and employers. The proposed Trans-Pacific Partnership trade deal may change environmental laws in the U.S. and abroad in ways that affect California businesses. The upcoming United Nations Climate Change Conference in Paris may lead to hard targets for greenhouse gas reductions in the U.S., and California's pioneering Under 2 MOU initiative may do the same on a sub-national basis. Our panel of experts will discuss the impact of these events on California.

This panel will discuss how the concerns, knowledge and perspectives of California's native peoples are integrated into the land use decision-making process and explore the challenges faced by tribal representatives and advocates, local governments and project proponents in implementing consultation and other cultural resource protection requirements. In addition to providing an overview of the key laws governing the field, this panel will tackle the meaning of "consultation" under SB 18 and the AB 52 amendments to CEQA, how to determine which tribes need to be consulted, the definition of a "tribal cultural resource," and how to balance protecting the confidentiality of tribal resources with transparent decision-making.

Session 12: Water Rights Light: Regulation to Prevent Waste and Unreasonable Use

Article X, section 2 of the California Constitution, which prohibits waste and unreasonable use of water, is a basic principle of California water rights law, providing broad, but flexible authority for the state to regulate water diversion and use. Until recently, the doctrine has been applied relatively infrequently, and on a case-by-case basis. Two significant developments in 2014 and 2015 may change that: The first is the District Court of Appeal's opinion in Light v. State Water Resources Control Board, upholding the State Water Resources Control Board's Russian River frost control regulations. The second is the State Water Resources Control Board's adoption of drought emergency regulations. The panel will discuss these developments and their implications for water management and protection of instream beneficial uses in California.

Session 14: Handling the High Profile Case: Strategies for Managing Complex Hazardous Waste, Environmental Remediation, Toxic Tort and Enforcement Matters

What are the issues you should think about if suddenly thrown into a high profile case? This panel will cover legal strategies and challenges in representing clients in significant, high liability environmental cases, including those resulting from "big events" (spills, explosions, toxic releases); legacy contamination (perhaps only recently discovered); and/or chronic, recalcitrant operators who ignore or underestimate years of non-compliance. Issues to be explored include: parallel proceedings, i.e., administrative actions (such as clean up orders and notices of noncompliance), civil actions (related to property damage, enforcement actions, and/or toxic torts), and/or criminal enforcement; litigation strategies (from venue selection to how to work with other parties and opposing counsel); dealing effectively with multiple governmental agencies; the role of insurance; and handling the press.

Session 15: Are Wind Turbines for the Birds? The Compatibility or Incompatibility of Wind Energy with Eagles and Other Birds

As the Governor's Office moves forward with its 50% renewable energy goal for 2030, the state could experience another renewable energy "gold rush," including a push for new wind energy development projects. Wind energy has potentially significant impacts on birds and bats. The new wind projects will likely seek to take advantage of new permitting procedures for the incidental take of special status avian species under the Bald and Golden Eagle Protection Act (BGEPA), while also navigating other regulatory requirements, including Endangered Species Act and potentially new permits that may be offered under the Migratory Bird Treaty Act. This panel will explore the interrelationship between wind energy development and protection of birds, and how this tension can be best handled given the regulatory requirements that are in place and other tools that are available.

Session 16: Going Nuts Over Water: The Law, Economics and Water Consequences of Cropping Choices

Deliveries from federal and state water projects helped transform arid regions of California into major agricultural centers, but questions remain about their scale, salinity and sustainability. California law makes irrigation the “next highest” use of water after domestic use. Critics charge that hardened demand to supply large irrigators with reliable water for nut trees and other permanent crops strains surface supplies during drought and contributes to groundwater overdraft. They also question using water for export of alfalfa and other crops. This panel explores the law, economics and water consequences of cropping choices, including potential roles of the constitutional restriction on unreasonable use, and of stricter requirements to show adequate supply (as for large housing developments and other projects). The panel will also discuss how cropping patterns affect implementation of California laws protecting groundwater and the Delta.

Session 17: What Happened Under the Capitol Dome?—The Latest Environmental Legislation from Sacramento

The California Legislature continues to pass groundbreaking environmental laws, which are often adopted nationally and internationally. During the 2015 legislative session, the Governor signed a number of new laws that, among others, tackle California’s severe drought, establish strategies and goals to address climate change, and promote renewable energy. Join our panel of seasoned legislative staffers for a timely discussion of newly enacted environmental, natural resources, and land use laws, with a special focus on legislative accomplishments and trends for the future.

Session 18: What’s New Under The Federal Clean Air Act?

Plenty. The Supreme Court has taken a heightened interest in this statute recently, including in 2014 with the Utility Air Regulatory Group (“UARG”) case and this year with the Mercury and Air Toxics Standards (“MATS”) rule case – a decision that may have a broad effect on EPA’s regulatory authority. EPA is considering new ozone (smog) standards. Here in California, the San Joaquin Valley and South Coast air districts are struggling to meet federal ozone limits that are many years old; how will they meet the new standards? And air districts throughout the state are revising their CAA implementation plans, giving rise to changing regulatory programs on the ground as well as legal challenges over whether they are doing enough. This panel will explore all of these recent developments . . . and much more.

Fire and Forest Structure

Fire has shaped forest structure in Yosemite National Park and fire exclusion has altered that structure. Now the National Park Service is using prescribed fires to restore the forest. Learn about how the forests of Yosemite National Park are changing and how the National Park Service is taking the role of fire into account as part of park management.

Native Yosemite

What is now Yosemite National Park was home to Native American tribes for millennia. Historically, Miwok and Paiute groups populated the area, in addition to other neighboring peoples who frequented the region. Following the discovery of gold and increased non-native settlements leading to California statehood, efforts increased to drive them from the area. These native peoples were the original stewards of the ecosystems in the area. Today the National Park Service collaborates with traditionally associated tribal groups to protect the natural, historical and cultural resources of the Park. Learn how Yosemite National Park addresses issues involving ethnology, archeology, traditional practices, and tribal consultation.

Mindfulness and Competence in Legal Practice

(MCLE: 1 Hour Competence Issues)

This presentation qualifies for 1.0 Hour MCLE Competence Issues (formerly known as Prevention, Detection and Treatment of Substance Abuse or Mental Illness.) Pre-registration is not available. Attendees seeking MCLE credit must sign a MCLE Log Book at the start of the presentation.

The nature of the legal profession and those drawn to it results in a substantially higher rate of substance abuse and mental health issues than in the general population. This program, presented in a beautiful outdoor setting, presents a background on lawyers, substance abuse and mental illness, covering personality types and the particular lawyer propensity to struggle with substance abuse. Participants will learn about their own personalities and factors which might lead them to such abuse, and explore ways this interferes with their ability to perform legal services competently. Discussion will include learning how mindfulness can be a tool to enhance awareness to detect the factors leading to abuse and to prevent their occurrence. Also discussed will be cravings and addictions, and how to detect and work with them.

The Environmental Law Section is honored to present its second annual Lifetime Achievement Award to E. Clement (Clem) Shute, Jr., a leading practitioner and innovator who has been instrumental in shaping substantive law and the culture of the environmental legal community in California for over five decades. Clem has contributed to the practice of environmental law in numerous ways, including driving to establish the State Bar's Environmental Law Section while he was a litigator at the California Attorney General's Office, co-founding the eponymous law firm that has been at the forefront of natural resources and environmental law for several decades, and profoundly influencing new generations of environmental lawyers. Clem broke ground in fields such as coastal protection, the public trust doctrine, the California Environmental Quality Act and regulatory takings, assisted in drafting the law under which the Tahoe Regional Planning Agency (where he is still a member of the Governing Board) operates today, and volunteered his time to many non-profit environmental organizations. During all these endeavors, Clem set high ethical standards for himself and others. The Environmental Law Section is proud to recognize Clem for his lifetime of achievements in environmental law.

Session 20: CEQA Practitioner Roundtable: Enforcing Project Descriptions and Mitigation Measures

This session is limited to 60 people. Sign up on the Course Selector.

When projects are subject to environmental review under CEQA, formulation of effective mitigation to avoid or lessen potentially significant impacts is a shared goal of lead agencies, the public and the applicant. But once adopted, project features and mitigation measures that are critical to reducing a project's environmental impacts may be changed and can be difficult to enforce. This practitioner-focused roundtable discussion will explore the forms mitigation may permissibly take under the statute, regulations and interpretive case law. The results of these varying approaches to mitigation on the ability of the public to participate in informed decision-making and to enforce what was agreed upon at the time of project approval in the context of recent legal developments will then be discussed.

Session 21: California's Safe Drinking Water Program at 40: New Directions

December 16, 2014 marked the 40th anniversary of the federal Safe Drinking Water Act, and the 40th anniversary of the California Safe Drinking Water Act will be in 2016. In 2014, California's drinking water program was transferred from the California Department of Public Health to the State Water Resources Control Board. This panel will review recent developments and challenges facing the drinking water program, including establishing maximum contaminant levels for Chromium 6 and other contaminants, place of use treatment, regulatory requirements for a reliable water supply to get public water systems through drought, and efforts to find emergency supplies for disadvantaged communities during the drought.

Session 22: The Other Side of Water: Stormwater Permits and Receiving Water Limitations

The State Water Resources Control Board has issued a precedential order affecting water quality in California through the adoption of municipal separate storm sewer system (MS4) permits. The order will require permits to continue to incorporate receiving water limitations and total maximum daily loads (TMDLs), but will also allow watershed-based program implementation to constitute compliance with those provisions. By issuing a decision on Los Angeles County's MS4 permit, which uses the watershed-based program approach in part to promote capture of stormwater runoff, the State Water Board has endorsed a paradigm shift from previous permits. This panel will discuss how the State Water Board order will affect MS4s statewide and beyond through the precedential determinations on receiving water limitations, TMDL implementation, and watershed program-based compliance, as well as how the new MS4 approach focusing on stormwater capture factors into the State's greater water supply picture and need to develop alternative water supply sources.

Session 24: Evaluating the Risks of Crude-by-Rail

A series of highly-publicized accidents involving crude oil trains, including an explosion in Lac Mégantic, Quebec, that killed 47 people, has given rise to a great deal of public concern about the safety of transporting crude oil by railroad. This panel will examine the accident, public health and environmental risks of crude-by-rail and similar projects, including topics such as how these risks should be addressed in the environmental review process, how to determine whether such risks are “significant”, the environmental justice implications, how mitigation measures can reduce such risks, and how doctrines like federal preemption interact with the environmental review process under state law.

Session 25: Reliability, Restoration and Resilience in Water Planning: Relearning the Three Rs in an Era of Climate Change

In 2014, California’s Water Action Plan recognized that climate change is compounding the current inability of the state’s water management system to “satisfactorily meet both ecological and human needs.” The plan identifies three broad objectives: reliable water supply, restoration of important species and habitat, and a more resilient water management system. This diverse panel of experts will evaluate the changing relationship of laws and institutions to these potentially conflicting objectives, and the potential future roles of supply and storage options, watershed restoration, and improvements in conservation.

Elimination of Bias in the Legal Profession

Session 26: Diversity and the Environmental Bar: Look to your Left, Look to your Right—Where Are the People of Color?

California is the second most diverse state in the Union (surpassed only by Hawaii). On July 1, 2013, the State officially confirmed its “majority minority” status, with non-Latino whites accounting for less than fifty percent of the State population for the first time since California’s statehood. On every front, we tackle issues that impact and are influenced by California’s diverse population, yet, the oft-stated goal of achieving diversity among the environmental bar remains elusive. Why is this so? A growing body of research shows that a number of unconscious and institutional factors impact who we hire, retain and promote. This panel seeks to not only highlight the lack of diversity in the world of environmental law, but discuss the reasons behind this phenomenon and present generally-applicable strategies for combating our unconscious and institutional biases.

Session 27: The Future of Rooftop Solar: What Happens Next Will Make All the Difference

In recent years, the growth of rooftop solar has been exponential in California and numerous other states. Many believe that rooftop solar is a key component of a sustainable energy future, and Governor Brown has indicated that it will be a significant part of achieving his 50% renewable energy goal. At the same time, utilities worry about loss of revenue as their customers go solar and about disruption of their established business model. Environmental justice advocates are concerned that the benefits of rooftop solar may not reach disadvantaged communities. The future of rooftop solar depends on decisions being made now by state regulators and legislatures, and California is at the forefront of this debate. This panel will discuss the state of play and what happens next in this exciting area.

SCHOLARSHIP INFORMATION—The 2015 Yosemite Scholarships Have Been Awarded

The State Bar Environmental Law Section is pleased to offer the Michael H. Remy Scholarship.

In his nearly thirty years of private practice, Michael Remy represented a wide variety of public and private clients as well as nonprofit organizations. Michael assisted large corporations and small entrepreneurs alike in various permitting and environmental matters throughout the state. Many counties, cities, and special districts relied on Remy's counsel in the processing, environmental review, and litigation of large and small projects. Some of his most notable environmental accomplishments were: heading the successful political and legal efforts to shut down the Rancho Seco Nuclear Power Plant; and representing the Sierra Club and William Hewlett against the conversion of Shirley Canyon to a commercial ski run by the Squaw Valley Ski Corporation. In 1990, the Environmental Council of Sacramento named Remy "Environmentalist of the Year." Remy was widely admired and loved by his colleagues, friends and family, who regarded him as a man of extraordinary intelligence, personal integrity, kindness, and generosity. Remy's warm presence is sorely missed by everyone at Remy Moose Manley, LLP, but even in his absence, his memory continues to provide guidance and inspiration.

This scholarship, sponsored by Remy Moose Manley, LLP in memory of former Environmental Law Section member and advisor, Michael H. Remy, includes tuition, travel and room for the 2015 Environmental Law Conference at Yosemite®. Five (5) scholarships were awarded.
